ENROLLMENT

Jimmy Lanahan '65, admissions counselor in Fr. Dermot Collins' office, says 598 freshmen are enrolled for the Fall term. This year, some 1900 applications for admissions were received. By Jan. 15, when applications were cut off, Jim reports, more than 500 female high school seniors had applied. And, the University had room for only 90 co-ed students.

Also, he points out, the Admissions Office received applications from a record number of students wishing to transfer to Bonaventure.

BASKETBALL

A question often asked by alumni is: "What freshmen basketball players are coming to Bonnie?"

To date, according to the papers, five high school graduates have indicated an intention of matriculating at St. Bonaventure.

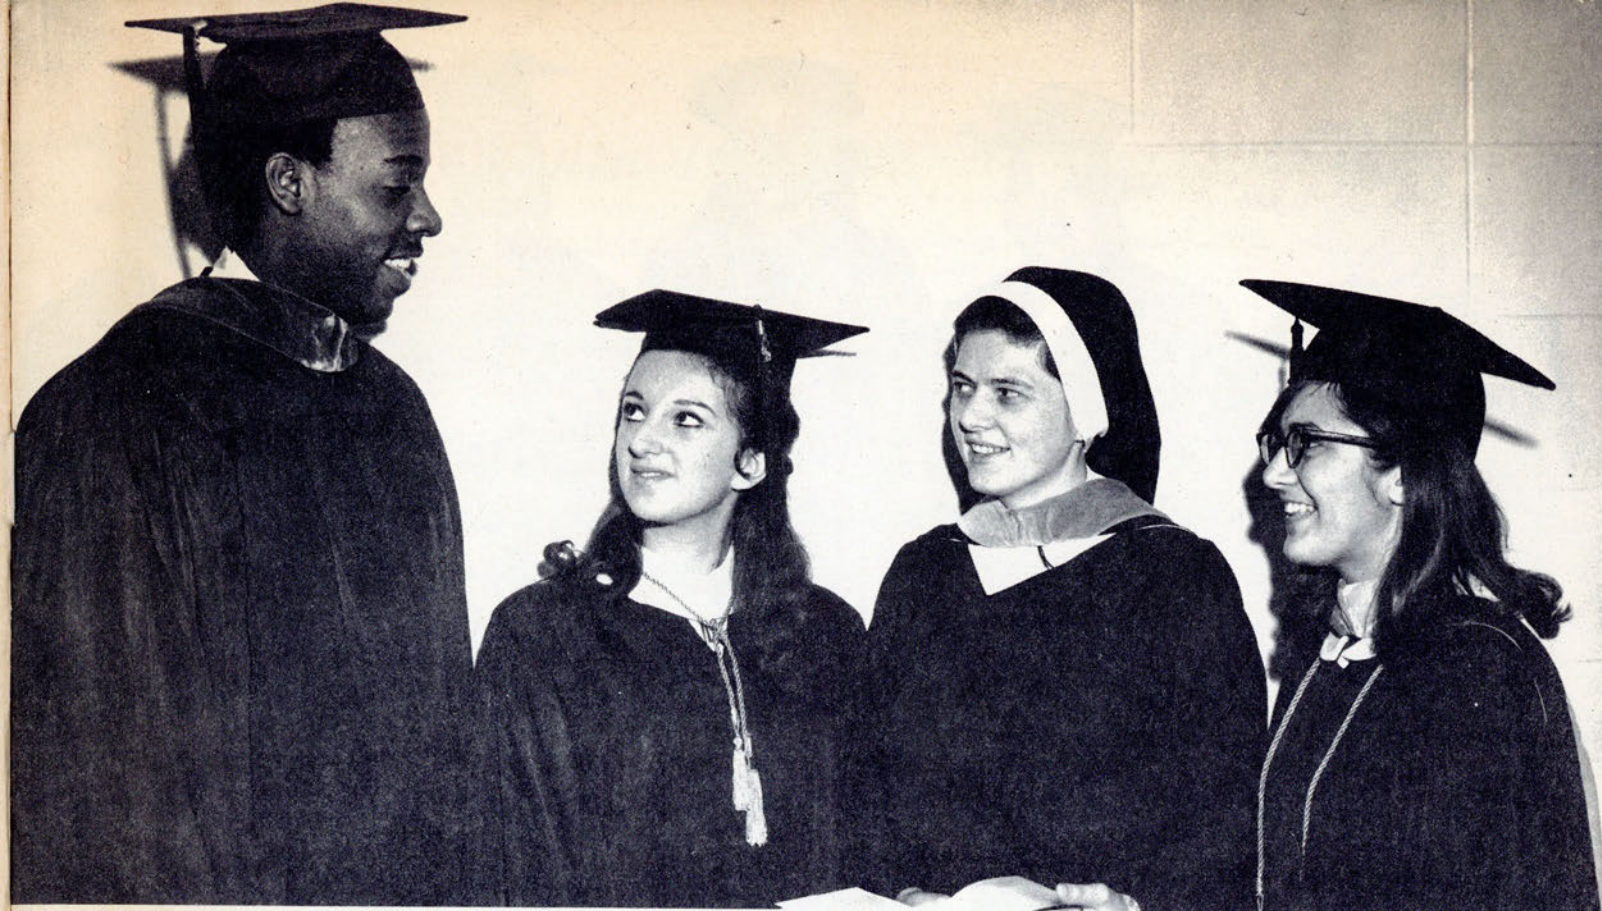

They include Bruce Miller, a 6-9 product of Fillmore, N. Y., Central; Tom Baldwin, 6-5 graduate of Wayland, N. Y., Central; 6-3 Paul Hoffman of St. Gabriel's High in Hazelton, Pa., and two Washingtonians.

Coming from Bill Butler's Mackin High is Vic Thomas, a 6-3 star who was picked on Washington's All Metropolitan second team, and Matthew Gantt, a 6-5 190-pounder who made the All Metropolitan first team.

SUMMER SCHOOL

Prof. Leo Keenan, director of the University's Summer Session, says the total enrollment for the current session totals 751, 34 more than the 717 who were studying on campus last year.

He notes that some 30 different orders of nuns are represented and that students this year came from Puerto Rico, Florida, the West Coast as well as from points along the Eastern Seaboard.

Three Women Graduates Take Academic Honors

It is not enough for universities to prepare students for a job. A larger responsibility is to "create a climate on campus where the student can learn to live the truth in love."

This message came from the Rev. Walter J. Burghardt, S.J., Baltimore, editor of "Theological Studies" and chairman of the Patristic Theology Department at Woodstock College, speaking at the University's 108th commencement exercises on June 2.

Father Burghardt, who received one of four honorary degrees conferred by the Very Rev. Reginald A. Redlon, OFM, St. Bonaventure president, also told university administrators and faculty members they have a responsibility to develop a collegian's heart as well as his mind.

The others who received honorary degrees were: Dr. Finla G. Crawford of Andover, N. Y., vice chancellor-emeritus of Syracuse University and chairman of the Alfred Board of Trustees; doctor of laws, for "a lifetime of service to higher education."

Brother Cajetan J. B. Baumann, OFM, director of the Office of Franciscan Art and Architecture, New York City; doctor of humane letters "An eminent demonstration of the possibility of blending religious commitment and professional competence."

Pierre R. Bretey, executive vice president, Hayden & Stone, Inc., New York City; doctor of commercial science, as a "loyal friend and a gracious benefactor of the university."

Three women students, including a Franciscan nun, who won top scholastic honors, were awarded medals for their excellence in their fields.

They were: arts, Miss Rosemary M. Proe of Niagara Falls; science, Miss Rose Marie D. Rybka of Harrison, N. J., and business, Sister William Joseph Matthews, OSF, Allegany.

Miss Proe was graduated summa cum laude, Miss Rybka, magna cum laude, and Sister William Joseph took her degree cum laude. Miss Proe also won the English medal.

William J. Butler, Washington, D. C., graduating senior basketball star, was honored as "Ideal Bonaventure Man," awarded only when a senior meets special standards and deemed to merit this high award.

Dad To An Even Dozen Receives One Of 9 Doctorates

Arnold T. Borer, Town of Freedom, N. Y., dairy farmer and father of a dozen children, was one of nine graduate students receiving the doctor of philosophy degrees awarded by the University. Operator of a 410-acre dairy farm in Northeast Cattaraugus County, Dr. Borer received his bachelor of science degree in agriculture from Cornell University in 1947. Six years ago, he decided to return to school. "It was entirely a family affair," he says, "and would not have been possible without the help of my wife." On hand to cheer for their Dad when he received his degree were his wife and 11 of his children. They are Mary Suzanne 7, Joe 8, Paul 13, Mary Agnes 15, Mary Catherine 10, John 11, Mary Ann 19, Mary Margaret 12, Tom 20, James 18, Mrs. Borer and Cyril 22.

'Live The Truth In Love' By Walter J. Burghardt, S. J.

Commencement Address June 2, 1968

Before your generation invaded Bonaventure, two attitudes divided Catholic educators on the function of a college. For some, the task of higher education was to fashion the whole man. The mind was to be fed with truth trained to think, screened from error. The soul was to be attuned to faith, formed to love, brought closer to God. The will was to be moved toward the good, not indeed like a muscle, but by mighty motivation. The body was to be developed — in strength, in poise, in grace — a pliant instrument of the soul. In this way the whole man would be progressively molded to Christian maturity, would, like the Christ of Nazareth, increase "in wisdom, in stature, in favor with God and man" (Lk 2:52).

For others, the task of higher education was intellectual; its focus was the mind. Oh yes, love should follow on knowledge, as night on day; but the primary end in view was the unfolding of intelligence. The Catholic college, they insisted, is not an annex of Vic Tanny or Charles Atlas, a steam room for overweight Christians. It is not a chapel, where faith is fortified against paganism and infidelity. What interests the college is the mind — not heart, will, emotions; not faith and hope and love; not sex and the single man.

Which will you choose? Today's student chooses neither; he is dissatisfied with both. At both he flings the same basic accusation: you do not deal with man as he is. You begin with man in the abstract, with human nature as it supposedly exists in any age or culture since the primal apple was stolen from Eden, and you end with a profile of the Christian or Catholic or Franciscan or Jesuit graduate as he ought to be till the second coming of Christ. You must begin with me, not as my father was but as I am; not with medieval man but with American man in the sixties.

And today's student has a bone to pick with each approach apart. Without arguing the issues on an academic level, he tells one group in effect: If you want to fashion the whole man, you cannot dismember him into mind and will, body and soul. You are dealing, not with faculties, but with a person. In educating the whole man, you have not been whole enough. You have cut living man into parts, and the parts you have put together again artificially. To the other group he objects: You cannot educate me to unbodied intelligence. An idea grips the whole man or it does not really grip him at all. Somewhat as faith is not really faith unless it is a living, loving faith, so knowledge is not really knowledge unless it is life-giving and love-laden: you do not really know if your learning is lifeless and loveless, if knowledge is not formative of the person but of the mind alone.

Through the revolution that is your very presence, through your resistance to the unreal, you have given educators a richer vision of what genuine education ought to be. The purpose of a college is to create a climate where the student, as a person, can learn to live the truth in love. Three interlocked aspects of education: (1) truth; (2) truth lived; (3) truth lived in love. And all this within the context of a person.

I

First then, there is an authentic sense in which the college revolves around TRUTH: its focus is the life of intelligence. We can say of the college what John Courtney Murray said of the pluralistic society: it is men locked together in argument, engaged in rational discourse. On a college campus it is the mind that is ceaselessly active, in the agony and ecstasy of knowledge. For as the eye is made to see and the ear to hear, as the hand is shaped to touch and the heart to love, so your mind has been fashioned by God to know.

And so this mind of yours looks into a microscope and is filled with the wonder of life which the naked eye cannot see. This mind speeds over oceans more swiftly than the jet and touches human beings from Siberia to Saigon, from the left bank of the Seine to the banks of the Jordan. This mind flees back into the past and rediscovers a universe perhaps five billion years old, rediscovers an America five centuries young. This mind plucks meaning from the strings of a harp and the whisper of the wind, from a sonnet or sonata from Michelangelo's Pieta and the Mona Lisa from Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Swan Lake ballet and Verdi's Aida. This mind looks into the minds of philosophers from ancient Greece to modern France, from Plato's world of ideas to the personalism of Marcel, to share their tortured search for what is real, for what is true. This mind looks into the mind of God as he reveals Himself in creation, on a cross, and in the lines of His own book; for the man of broad knowledge, the woman of wisdom, remembers the remarkable passage in the Book of Jeremiah (9:23-24):

"Thus says the Lord:

'Let not the wise man boast of his wisdom,
Nor the strong man boast of his strength,
Nor the rich man boast of his riches!
But if one must boast, let him boast of this,
That he knows and understands me.'"

II

Education focusses on truth, yes. But for today's student, truth is not primarily something "out there," something that gathers dust in the mind, something isolated from the world in which people make bombs and make love, hunger and hate, laugh and cry, starve and rot and kill. For him, truth is not truth unless it is alive and lived.

Truth is not truth unless it is ALIVE. Today's student is impatient, dissatisfied, angry, if the questions that concern the colleges are dead issues: if its philosophy accentuates abstract knowledge at the expense of a richer experience of reality; if its theology only prove propositions and does not make present a living divine Person; if history is a set of blind dates and not a search for the totality of past human experience; if literature is little more than grammar and not an insight into living man with his pride and his passion; his tragic greatness; if science can only promise him the means to computerize the spirit and does not free him for a brave new world.

For today's student, college must be an experience of truth where God and man come alive.

More than that: for today's student, truth is not their truth unless it is LIVED. They will not buy the proposition that education is purely a preparation, that what you learn in college you go put into practice later. College is not coextensive with campus, an island separated from the mainland of action. If I create in today's students a searing sense of justice, I should not be surprised if I find them with the grape pickers in Delano or on the streets of Harlem. If I open their eyes to freedom, if they are racked by the realization that a human being is not genuinely human unless he is free, I may well expect to meet them on the road to Birmingham or encumbering the campus at Columbia. If they have come to a pulsing sense of community, of the oneness of all men in flesh and in Christ, I dare not be dismayed if I see them some long hot summer arm in arm with CORE in Buffalo, or protesting human slaughter in Vietnam. Of course there will be kooks among them, Beatniks and Vietniks, rebels for rebellion's sake, all shades of red.

But a movement cannot be judged by its books — as we judge not the hierarchy by an anti-Semitic bishop, or the priesthood by a chaplain who runs off with the general's daughter, or Franciscan education by its occasional pedants. Of course the student may be wrong, abysmally wrong, on war and peace, on justice and injustice, on this individual issue in this individual city at this individual moment; and the results may be tragic. But in a sense this is relatively unimportant; far more important is this passion; not simply to know the truth but to live it, to tear truth from the textbook and nail it to their hearts.

III

My final point: it is not enough that you live the truth — not even enough that you die for it. On many an arm-in-arm march there are human beings who live the truth but do not LOVE it. In every crusade there are those who are convinced that justice, like war, can only be won with hate. In every community, all over the world, there are men and women whose love is limited to their own country, their own color, their own creed, their own small cell.

In no phase of human living will your learning be thoroughly human, nowhere will it be authentically Christian, unless it is impregnated with a three-faceted love: love for God's creation, for God's people, for God Himself. Cold knowledge of nature's forces, without reverence for the work of God's hands, risks making each atom a perilous thing, each moon-landing a step to destruction. Sheer knowledge, empty of love, can only turn a marriage barren. Unless you love, the poor will never forgive you for the bread you offer them. And all your discovery of God — whether it be a rose that reveals Him, or a man, or the Son of Mary — will end in frustration, in alienation, in isolation, if it does not end in oneness, in a person-to-person relationship between a human being and a living God.

This is the challenge to the educated — in a fascinating, frightening world, where knowledge continues to explode, where the individual is a number, where annihilation hovers over mankind in a mushroom cloud. This is your challenge: so to link love with lived learning that the things which you work become instruments of peace and justice, that every person whose life you touch is the more human for having known you, that the God you have come to know will be each day a living, quickening reality within you.

To create a climate where the student, as a person can learn to live the truth in love — indeed you young men and women have enriched education with a thrilling new dimension. The remarkable thing is that to live the truth in love is to grow up into Christ. It is St. Paul's thrilling affirmation: "Living the truth in love, we are to grow up in every way into Him who is the head, into Christ" (Eph 3:15).

Why? Quite simply, because to live the truth in love is to grow up into a person. You are not fully a person except in so far as you are related to another person, to a community of persons. You must be (in a striking phrase) "for others," else you are no one, you are nothing. For others — not only the white, but the black and brown and the yellow. Not only North Americans, but Southeast Asians. Not only the clean and the love-laden and the respectable, but the dirty and the hate-choked and the repulsive.

Why "for" these? Because each of them, at the core of his self, is not only awfully human but somehow like God. Not because he has eyes to see and ears to hear, hands to touch and legs to walk, but because he shares perfections that are divine: the power to know and to love; to power to be, as Jesus was, a "man for others;" the power to communicate himself to another creature, to give of himself without ceasing to be himself. Because, in the words of St. Paul, with us "there cannot be Greek and Jew, circumcised and uncircumcised, slave man and free, but Christ is all and in all" (Col 3:11). This is why in the second century St. Irenaeus could eulogize man as he did: "God's glory, it is man alive." This is why in the twentieth century Martin Buber could write so simply and so profoundly: "Every particular thou is a glimpse through to the eternal Thou." For, according to a haunting rabbinical interpretation, the Lord said to Moses: "Wherever you see the trace of man, there I stand before you."

To live the truth in love: it is your task to recreate this climate wherever you go — in laboratory and living room, on the streets of your city and in the paddy fields of Vietnam. Not by dictatorial ukase, not by force of arms. Rather by being what you are: a man or woman "for others;" a person for whom, as Gerard Manley Hopkins put it, "the world is charged with the grandeur of God;" a person to whom nothing that is human is a stranger; a person for whom the God-man whose sacrifice you recaptured this morning is a living and a loving Person to whom you respond with a response that is truth lived and truth loved.

School Of Education To Offer Bachelor's Degree

The University's School of Education will inaugurate a new elementary teacher-training program, effective in September, 1968. The four-year program will lead to the bachelor of science degree in education. It will include a 24-hour professional study core and 95 hours from the liberal arts. Students entering this program will register as education majors.

University officials said copies of the new program have been submitted to the state education department for study and evaluation and that the University hoped to receive approval. This approval is necessary before the School of Education can recommend candidates for state certification. The next step would be a five-year registered program.

Currently, Bonaventure has a registered program with the state department for certification of secondary teachers.

The Cattaraugus County Elementary Principals' Association has offered its cooperation and counsel. On the need for an elementary program in Southwestern New York State, Miss Geraldine McLaughlin, President of the Association and Elementary Supervisor in the Allegany school system, says "it is to our advantage to have teachers trained here with the thought that they will stay, as have many secondary teachers educated at St. Bonaventure. It will give elementary education in this area a shot in the arm."

A testimonial dinner in honor of Dr. Russell J. Jandoli, chairman of the University's Department of Journalism, was climaxed by the surprise announcement of the establishment of a journalism scholarship, commemorating his 20 years at the University. Contributions totaled more than $1000 and are still coming in from journalism students, alumni, friends and fellow members of the University staff. Key members of the planning group with Dr. Jandoli included from left: Susan Mikula, Dr. Jandoli, Prof. George Evans, Margaret Breen and Monica Nollett.

St. Bonaventure University's Advisory Council to the President on Journalism assists Father Reginald and Dr. Russell J. Jandoli, chairman of the Journalism Department, in setting high standards and providing close liaison with the professional journalism field. It includes some of America's leading editors, publishers, writers, radio and television executives and publicists. Attending a May meeting on campus included from left, seated:

A. Vernon Croop, Norris W. Vagg, Charles Wellner, Fr. Rudolph Harvey, OFM, Fr. Reginald Redlon, OFM, Dr. A. H. Kirchhofer, Chairman; Mrs. Charles E. Hewitt, Cy King, Fred W. Stein, and H. K. Williams. Standing, same order: George P. Evans, Paul E. Neville, Latham Weber, Dr. Russell J. Jandoli, Joseph M. Cleary, Si Goldman, Hamilton B. Mizer, Assistant Chairman; and E. Boyd Fitzpatrick.

Postal Employee Retires After 20 Years

Mrs. Celia M. Walsh of Allegany has retired after 20 years as a postal employee in the campus post office.

Mrs. Walsh started in the college post office Oct. 1, 1947, when the late Brother Cletus Glackin, OFM, was postmaster. Then, the small facilities of the office were in the basement of De La Roche Hall. She served the full length of time the post office was in the old administration building, 1948-1964, and since the new office building was built.

During the earlier years of the post office, a period of rapid growth for the university, Mrs. Walsh directed the work of many students employed part-time in the office.

Upon retirement, Mrs. Walsh received a citation from Postmaster General Lawrence F. O'Brien, for "devotion to duty in the course of an honorable career."

Fr. Joel Named Intern-on-Campus

Fr. Joel A. Cambell, OFM, Administrative Assistant to Fr. Reginald, President of the University, has been appointed by the American Council on Education as an administration intern-on-campus for the academic year 1968-69.

As a result of this approval by the Council, Fr. Reginald said the University will become an official "cooperating institution" in the internship program.

The 1968-69 internship programs is the fourth of these annual programs. Its purpose is to strengthen leadership in American higher education by the identification of persons whose background and potential show promise for academic administration.

Fr. Cambell, a native of Media, Pa., and a Franciscan priest since 1960, will continue as Administrative Assistant to the President while serving as an academic intern.

John M. Hart Jr., a June graduate, 2d from right, was the recipient of the Olean Chapter's Robert A. Gavin Memorial Award, given annually to an area senior and based on his or her academic record, character, leadership, and extra curricular activities. With the recipient are his parents, Col. and Mrs. John M. Hart, Sr., James Keenan, president Olean Chapter, and the Rev. Ernest O'Donnell, OFM, principal speaker at the breakfast.

Assistant Dean Elected To Executive Committee

Dr. Boyd Litzinger, Assistant Dean of St. Bonaventure University's School of Arts and Science, has been elected to the executive committee of Delta Epsilon Sigma, national scholastic honor society for Catholic colleges and universities, it has been announced by the Rev. Joseph E. Lennon, O.P., society president.
