Observer.

Mrs. John Wilson is quite sick. Her daughter from the West and one from Bradford have arrived at home.

Miss Elva Rice and sister from Jamestown have visited relatives in Leona and Fredonia.

Perhaps there are but few persons that were more largely represented by relatives in the late war than the writer of this article, having one son, two brothers, one brother-in-law and eight nephews in the service, besides three cousins and numerous other more distant relatives.

Last week I attended the funeral of one of these soldier nephews, William Case of the town of Ripley. In passing along the main road I could but note the changes that had taken place in a few years, instead of the fields of corn and wheat, we now see grapes on all available land, in some places as far as the eye could see on both sides of the road the grape fields spread out in all their green luxuriance, and I thought of the nimble hands that would be required to gather in the wonderful harvest, and the far away cities where the luscious fruit would be transported and the many palates that would water with the goodly grapes of Chautauqua county. We saw men still putting out grape roots, thus manifesting their faith in the future; we learned that the rose bug in North East on the gravelly soil was eating the young grapes, and a large force of women and children was engaged in destroying them. Everything has an enemy, even man has the devil.
