

Death Of Dr. D. W. Day

Expires Suddenly While Delivering an Address at Medical Society Meeting.

Dr. Dwight W. Day of this city, brief mention of whose sudden death was made in the Free Press last evening, was one of the best known and most popular physicians in this part of the state, and his death will be deeply deplored by scores here and elsewhere. Able and energetic, he enjoyed a large and lucrative practice. The cause of his death was apoplexy, and for some months and up to the time of his death he enjoyed excellent health. He was in attendance to the meeting of the Inter County Medical Association at Laycock Hall and was on the program to deliver a paper titled: "The Model Doctor Has Never Existed?" He had fairly entered the midst of his theme when he suddenly tottered, and before assistance could reach him had fallen to his knees, and then to the floor. Dr. B. Lyman, president of the meeting, and others were at his side immediately, and all that medical skill could suggest was done, but without avail. The pulse dropped, and respiration almost ceased. Strychnine and nitroglycerine was administered and for a brief period the pulse showed activity, but immediately failed again. Hardly five minutes elapsed from the time the doctor first fell till death ensued. He had been reading in his customary tone, and apparently in his customary health, suddenly his voice ceased, he fell to the floor, and in a very brief space was beyond earthly call. Henry L. Day, brother of the deceased, was present at the time.

The ambulance was called and the body removed to the family residence on South Farwell street.

Mrs. Day, who was at the home of Mrs. Eugene Shaw, was telephoned

$6,000 and $7,000 in cash. The robbers entered the building through a rear window and then with dynamite blew open the doors of the vault and money safe. J. W. Whelan is president and R. Southworth, cashier. The bank is fully insured from all losses. No clues to the robbers have as yet been found, though they are reported to have come towards this city.

The prospects for a post-season football game between Wisconsin and Michigan for the final settlement of the western championship were given a black eye yesterday by Coach King, who has come to Milwaukee to spend a few days assisting Jerry Riordan coach the Milwaukee Medics team for their game with Beloit on Turkey Day. King is not willing to go into details as to why he is opposed to a post season game, but says that his attitude has always been against prolonging a season, and that it has not changed this season.—Milwaukee Journal.

The boys and girls who leave our High School do not forget their Alma Mater. This was shown this week when on Monday last the physics laboratory was the recipient of a beautiful Wheat stone bridge made by Garry Dean who is now a junior in the Mechanical Engineering course at the State University. The bridge was made entirely by himself in his spare moments. He may well be proud of his labor for the workmanship is excellent. For the sake of those who are not familiar with this instrument it may be said that it is used to measure electrical resistances by balancing known and unknown resistances against each other until an equilibrium is reached. Resistances can be measured to a small fraction of an ohm by means of this bridge.

PLAN FOR THE EXPO.

Hoard Heads Badger Board for St. Louis Show.

Madison, Wis., Nov. 18.—The Wisconsin state board of managers for the fair to be held at St. Louis in 1903 met in the executive office of the capitol this afternoon and organized by electing former Governor W. D. Hoard of Fort Atkinson, president; William Gender of Milwaukee, vice president; Senator J. H. Stout of Menominee, treasurer, and Professor W. A. Scott of Madison, secretary pro tempore. Later it is expected, a paid secretary will be elected.

The managers spent most of their time in general discussion of the character and scope of the Wisconsin exhibit. Though nothing definite was done, it seemed to be the opinion of the board that it would be best to make the industrial interests and resources of the state the main feature of the exhibit. Other things marking the development of the state are not, however, to be neglected. The educational interests especially are to be well represented.

The managers favor the erection of a commodious and artistic state building on the fair grounds, similar to those at Chicago and Buffalo.

The governor called the meeting and took some part in the proceedings. Besides the officers named the board includes former Assemblyman W. H. Flagg of Merrill. All of the members except Senator Stout were present. The board adjourned to meet again at the call of the president.

The last legislature appropriated $25,000 for a suitable state exhibit at the fair. This is the same amount expended by the state at Buffalo. At Chicago $100,000 was spent.

Mrs. Eugene Snaw, was telephoned and in a measure was prepared for the worst. She did not know the doctor was dead, however, until he arrived at her home, when the report of the sad tidings was brode to her as gently as possible, by Henry Day.

Dwight Washington Day, physician and surgeon, Eau Claire, was born May 15, 1841, in Eagle Village, Wyoming county, N. Y. He graduated in the class of 1861 at the Buffalo Medical College, and was resident physician at the lying-in hospital and the Buffalo City hospital on year. In July, 1862, he received the appointment assistant surgeon of the One Hundred and Fifty-Fourth regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, doing general service in the army of the Potomac and was with Gens. Rosecrans and Sherman. He was made surgeon in 1864 when mustered out, held the position of brigade surgeon. After practicing eighteen months in Elkader, Cayuga county, Iowa, he located in Eau Claire in October, 1868, and has for many years been a leading man in his profession, doing a great deal of surgery. He is a member of the Wisconsin State Medical society, and an honorary member of the Minnesota Medical Society, the only one in this section of the state that enjoys that distinction. He was also president of the United States Examining Pension Board. April 7, 1866, he married, Franklinville, N. Y., Miss Elizabeth Ann, daughter of Wm. Smith, merchant of New York City. Politically Dr. Day was a staunch Republican and served as mayor of Eau Claire in 1885. He was a member of the following orders: Masonic, Knights Pythias, Elks and Grand Army of the Republic.

The funeral will take place Saturday of this week at 2 p. m. from the residence on South Farwell street. Services will be conducted by Revs. J. W. Krizzell and L. C. Grainger. Burial will be in Forest Hill cemetery in charge of the Masonic order.
