

WHO IS HE?—On the field of Gettysburg, after the battles, the dead body of a Union soldier was found, holding in his clasped hands an ambrotype picture of three children, a girl and two boys, aged apparently about nine, seven and five years. In the picture, the youngest child, a boy, is seated in a high chair, between his elder brother and his sister, while the dresses of the two latter are made of the same material. The soldier was buried on the field where he fell, and his grave is marked, but his name could not be ascertained. It is hoped, however, that he may yet be identified by means of the ambrotype of the children found in his hands when his body was discovered. The picture is now in possession of Dr. Bourns, 1104th Spring Garden street, Philadelphia, who can be called upon or addressed in reference to it.
